Early Math Training Adds Up

Study: What children learn about numbers plays big role later on

Washington

We know a lot about how babies learn to talk and kids learn to read. Now scientists are unraveling the earliest building blocks of math — and what children know about numbers as they begin first grade seems to play a big role in how well they do everyday calculations later on.

The findings have specialists considering steps that parents might take to spur math abilities, just like they do to try to raise a good reader. This isn't only about trying to improve the nation's math scores and attract kids to become engineers. It's far more basic.

Consider: How rapidly can you calculate a tip? Do the fractions to double a recipe? Know how many quarters and dimes the cashier should hand back as your change?

About 1 in 5 adults in the U.S. lacks the math competence expected of a middle-schooler, meaning they have trouble with those ordinary tasks and aren't qualified for

How well can you make change? Calculate a tip? Do fractions to double a recipe? About 1 in 5 U.S. adults lacks the math competence expected of a middle-schooler.

"It's not just, can you do well in school? It's how well can you do in your life. We are in the midst of math all the time."

— DR. KATHY MANN KOEPKE, OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH, WHICH IS FUNDING MATH COGNITION RESEARCH

many of today's jobs. The National Institutes of Health is funding much of this research into math cognition.

A new study shows trouble can start early. University of Missouri researchers tested 180 seventh-graders. Those who lagged behind their peers in a test of core math skills that are needed to function as adults were the same kids who'd had the least number sense or fluency back when they started first grade.

"The gap they started with, they don't close it," says Dr. David Geary, a cognitive psychologist who leads the study that is tracking children from kindergarten to high school in the Columbia, Mo., school system. "They're not catching up."

This number sense, or what Geary more precisely terms "number system knowledge," turns out to be a fundamental skill that students continually build on, much more than the simple ability to count.

What's involved? Understanding that numbers represent different quantities — that three dots is the same as the numeral "3." Grasping magnitude — that 23 is bigger than 17. Getting the concept that numbers can be broken into parts — that 5 is the same as 2 and 3, or 4 and 1. Showing on a number line that the difference between 10 and 12 is the same as the difference between 20 and 22.

Exactly how to intervene still is being studied. But Dr. Kathy Mann Koepke of the National Institutes of Health says it's best to start early.

"We should be talking to our children about magnitude, numbers, distance, shapes as soon as they're born," she said. LAURAN NEERGAARD (AP)

Give Us a (Spring) Break

No flip-flops, only snow boots, as storm dumps on East Coast

Hamburg, Pa.

Five days into spring, warm weather and budding flowers were just a hoax Monday as the East Coast endured another blast of winter.

A wide-ranging storm that buried parts of the Midwest weakened as it moved east but still managed to carpet lawns and fields in a fresh layer of white. Many schools opened late or closed early, and hundreds of flights were canceled.

The cold temperatures and miserable mixture of snow and rain had people longing for more agreeable weather.

"I'm ready for flip-flops," said Jessica Cunitz, 24 of Westchester County, N.Y., who stopped at a gas station in Pennsylvania to fill her overheating car with antifreeze. "It's supposed to be spring."

Earlier, the storm walloped the Midwest, dumping a record 17 inches in Springfield, Ill., and a foot or more elsewhere in the state.

Penn State student Katy Kober walks Monday to campus in State College, Pa.

Cherry Blossoms?

The spring snow was not expected to affect Washington's famous cherry blossoms. National Park Service spokeswoman Carol Johnson said the flowering trees are still expected to reach peak bloom between April 3 and 6. (AP)

Numerous vehicles were reported to be off roads, state police said.

The system was little more than a nuisance by the time it reached the East Coast. Air travel saw the biggest impact, with nearly 600 flights canceled as of Monday afternoon, according to the FlightAware tracking service. Hardest-hit airports included those in New York, Philadelphia and Washington.

Mitchell Gaines, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service, said colder-than-normal temperatures the past few weeks had created conditions ripe for snow.

"It's fairly late in March to see a system like this," he said.

Sandusky Maintains Innocence

Sandusky

Penn State's football coach — Jerry Sandusky is again claiming he did nothing wrong.

Sandusky has rarely spoken about the allegations, although the former Penn State assistant coach has consistently maintained his innocence since his November 2011 arrest. The latest statements came Monday in portions of a taped interview aired on NBC's "Today" and in transcripts posted on the website of John Ziegler, a filmmaker who aims to clear the name of the late Joe Paterno, Penn State's former head football coach who was fired after Sandusky's arrest.

In the interviews, Sandusky denied having inappropriate contact with the boys, although he acknowledged he may have "tested boundaries."

"Yeah, I hugged them," Sandusky said. "Maybe I shouldn't have showered with them. Yeah, I tickled them."

Paterno's family distanced themselves from the comments.

Wick Sollers, a Paterno family lawyer, said in a statement that Sandusky's statements are "transparently self-serving and yet another insult to the victims." (AP)

Cyprus Bailout Scars Eurozone

$13B deal threatens to undercut bloc's response to crisis

Frankfurt, Germany

European leaders may have saved Cyprus from imminent financial collapse when they clinched a last-minute $13 billion deal in the early hours of Monday morning.

But how they did it has left political and psychological scars across Europe that are far out of proportion to the nation's tiny size — and that could hinder the eurozone's efforts to solve its debt crisis.

The deal was agreed with euro finance ministers along with the International Monetary Fund and the European Central Bank, hours ahead of a crucial deadline. The ECB threatened to cut off crucial assistance to Cyprus's struggling

What the Deal Means

Cyprus on Monday agreed to slash its oversized banking sector and inflict hefty losses on large depositors in troubled banks to secure the $13 billion bailout. President Nicos Anastasiades also said the deal will require the central bank to impose temporary limits on bank transactions. Here's a look at some of the problems raised by the latest eurozone bailout:

Safeguarding Savers: The Cyprus rescue undermined Europe's deposit insurance guarantees. Though a proposal to take 6.75 percent of deposits from people with less than the insured limit was rejected, its mention raises the chance that depositors in other countries will flee in a crisis, putting pressure on banks.

A Deep Divide: The dispute underlines the eurozone's political fault line between donor countries in northern Europe and the zone's indebted countries in southern Europe. Analysts also say Germany's refusal to contribute serves as a reminder of how far the bloc remains from any kind of common responsibility for state finances.

Return of the Greek Tragedy: Cyprus' rescue loan may leave so much added debt, and reduce economic growth so much, that some analysts are already saying another international bailout may one day become necessary — as it did with Greece. (AP) banks Monday if no deal was reached. The resulting collapse would have dragged Cyprus' economy down and possibly pushed the country out of the euro.

The rescue puts the costs of the country's broken banks where many analysts, finance officials and Europe's leaders say they belong: on the two big Cypriot banks' creditors, shareholders and big wealthy depositors — not on taxpayers and small savers. The country also agreed to restructure and downsize its banking system, which had ballooned to seven times the size of the economy, so it would not threaten the country's economy again.

Before Monday's deal came 10 days of tortuous debate. The initial deal agreed on March 16 was rejected by Cyprus' parliament. The country's banks then closed to prevent depositors from withdrawing all their money. DAVID MCHUGH (AP)

Kosher Smokes: Observant Jews in Israel can now enjoy a rabbi-approved smoke during the weeklong Passover holiday that started at sundown Monday. It's the first time cigarettes are among goods checked for kosher-compliance. But the chief rabbinate in Israel disapproved, saying cigarettes are life-threatening. "Poison is not kosher. For all days of the year, not just Passover," said Ziv Maor, the chief rabbinate's spokesman. (AP)

Kerry, Karzai Offer Show of Unity

As U.S. turns over prison, Afghan leader touts 'very good day'

Kabul, Afghanistan

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Afghan President Hamid Karzai made a rare show of unity Monday after the U.S. military ceded control of its last detention facility in Afghanistan, ending a long-standing irritant in relations between the two countries.

Kerry said he and Karzai were "on the same page" when it comes to peace talks with the Taliban.

Aid Talks

John Kerry planned to meet with civic leaders and others Monday to discuss continued U.S. aid to Afghanistan. His unannounced 24-hour visit to the country was his sixth since President Barack Obama became president but his first as Obama's secretary of state. (AP)

Karzai had infuriated U.S. officials by accusing Washington of colluding with Taliban insurgents to keep Afghanistan weak even as the Obama administration presses ahead with plans to hand off security responsibility to Afghan forces and end NATO's combat mission by the end of next year.

But Kerry said Monday: "I am confident [Karzai] does not believe the U.S. has any interest except to see the Taliban come to the table to make peace."

For his part, Karzai said "today was a very good day," citing the turnover of the detention facility at the U.S.-run Bagram military base.

The two spoke at a joint news conference during which Kerry also praised what he said was Afghanistan's commitment to "safe, secure" and transparent elections, scheduled for April 2014. (AP)

Buses, Baseball And Blossoms

Monday's slushy mess is likely to be the worst weather of the week, with conditions steadily improving for commuters, the Capital Weather Gang says. Some of those commuters will be discovering new bus routes and adapting to new schedules. And street and sidewalk traffic will be building for the National Cherry Blossom Festival.

Here are some tips for taking advantage of events and avoiding problem areas:

Express Connector

Fairfax County just added two routes to the bus service that takes advantage of the new 495 Express Lanes on the Capital Beltway. These Express Connector routes take commuters from Lorton and Springfield, Va., to Tysons. The one-way fare will be $3.65 with a SmarTrip card and $4 with cash. But through April 12, the ride is free.

NextBus App Returns

The missing app is back. It's the one that was called NextBus DC, which many Metrobus riders who have smartphones found helpful for tracking arrival times. The new version is called iCommute DC. There's a "Lite" version for free and an enhanced version for $1.99.

Washington Nationals Exhibition Game

The Washington Nationals play an exhibition game against the New York Yankees at 2:05 p.m. Friday at Nationals Park. The nearest Metro-rail station is Navy Yard.

Cherry Blossoms

The Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority notes that ridership can spike by 15 percent during blossom season, and the weekend ridership can approach weekday levels. Metro will suspend its weekend track work program through April 14. Despite the crowding, taking Metrorail will almost always be better than driving downtown.

'Digital Capital Week' Powers Off

Event founders say city no longer needs popular tech festival

Washington

After three years, the organizers behind Digital Capital Week are pulling the plug on the annual festival for technology enthusiasts in Washington.

The event was designed to bring the region's small and often fragmented community of technologists and creative types together in one place, replicating the collaborative environment that exists more naturally in technology hubs like Silicon Valley.

D.C. Week was co-created by iStrategyLabs chief executive Peter Corbett and Tech Cocktail co-founders Jen Consalvo and Frank Gruber.

Early discussions are under way for a different event that might attract a wider audience, but organizers said the specifics are far from concrete.

"We feel like today there doesn't need to be a D.C. Week," Corbett said. "We think the ecosystem has very much matured."

The local scene certainly doesn't lack for events. Monthly D.C. Tech

Group Funding

Entrepreneurs looking for seed-stage capital have a new group to pitch to: NextGen Angels, a club of Washington businesspeople ages 40 and under who want to funnel money to fledgling ventures. It's the brainchild of Dan Mindus, the investment director at the Center for Innovative Technology. The group first met in September, and Mindus said last week that it is preparing to make its first investment as a collective. "There's tremendous interest in entrepreneurship in our region," he said. (CAPITAL BUSINESS)

Meetups, which Corbett also helps organize, draw hundreds of attendees from around the region. Start-up accelerators such as The Fort and, more recently, 1776 also serve as a gathering place for local entrepreneurs.

"We need to re-envision what we do going forward," Corbett said. Those plans may include a more internationally focused event that partners with local embassies to bring upstarts from around the world to Washington.

Such an event would happen in the spring of 2014 at the earliest, Corbett said. STEVEN OVERLY (CAPITAL BUSINESS)

A rendering of a remodeled Ballston mall shows shops open to the sidewalk.

Ballston May Have a Mall-Makeover in Store

Arlington

Forest City Washington is planning an upgrade of Ballston Common Mall in Arlington that would include adding a row of sidewalk retail along Wilson Boulevard and residential units above the property.

Thomas W. Henneberry, chief operating officer at Forest City Washington, said he has begun discussing the future of the 579,000-square-foot mall with county officials and pitching the idea to prospective retail owners.

Many of the mall's most popular features would be upgraded or expanded, including the Kettler Capitals Iceplex, a Regal movie theater and a Sport & Health Club.

Under the plans, the mall's eastern end at North Randolph Street would be torn down and replaced with a row of outward-facing shops and residential towers above.

In trying to open the mall to the street and add housing, Forest City is pursuing a similar strategy to other mall owners in the area who have watched shoppers migrate to more urban, mixed-use projects.

Forest City will have to receive a number of county approvals and has not yet submitted a formal proposal. The redevelopment plans hinge upon a deal being completed to purchase Macy's Furniture Gallery, which Forest City would like to tear down.

On Gay Marriage, A Cautious Court?

Two landmark cases offer clues that the justices may steer clear of a major ruling

Washington

With an overwhelming majority of state laws pointing one way and public opinion trending rapidly in the other, the Supreme Court may enter this week's historic arguments over same-sex marriage with a preference for caution over boldness.

Two cases — today's involves California's ban on such unions; Wednesday's concerns Congress' decision to withhold federal recognition of legally married same-sex couples — offer the justices an unusually wide range of options. A broad constitutional ruling is one possibility, but so is a finding that the cases are not ripe for decision.

But the court's first full examination of whether the right to marry must be extended to same-sex couples puts on full display the justices' official responsibility as arbiter of the Constitution, as well as its unofficial role as interpreter of the nation's readiness for social change.

Same-sex marriage backers say conditions could not be better for the issue to reach the nation's highest court.

Theodore Boutsos, an attorney for two California couples challenging that state's ban on gay marriage, points to the growing number of states that now authorize same-sex marriage, the shifting stances of the nation's leaders and polls that show a majority of Americans now favor a concept of marriage that did not exist anywhere in the world until 2000.

Other supporters worry about asking the Supreme Court to do too much too quickly. Barry Friedman, a New York University law professor who argues that the court's major decisions eventually align with public sentiment, said the same-sex-marriage cases are vexing for the court. "Gay rights cases have been an area in which the Supreme Court has tended to be particularly in touch with public opinion," Friedman said.

But is public opinion best represented by the fact that four-fifths of the states forbid same-sex marriage? Or is momentum headed the other way?

Two past cases — neither touching on the issue of gay rights — offer lessons about the consequences of a broad ruling, advocates say.

One is Roe v. Wade, the court's 1973 ruling that swept away states' ability to prohibit or restrict abortion in early stages of pregnancy. It is cited in many of the briefs filed before the court as a warning of a judicial intrusion into the political arena that prolonged division rather than concluding it.

A broad finding that the constitutional right to marriage must be extended to same-sex couples — which is what the California couples request — would force a national solution on a nation not ready for it, opponents say.

Same-sex marriage backers point to Loving v. Virginia, in which the court in 1967 struck laws banning interracial marriage. While it seems the majority of Americans are tolerant of same-sex marriage, polls then showed more than 60 percent of the U.S. opposed mixed-race marriages, said David Boies, a lawyer arguing for the same-sex couples.

"But when that decision came down, there wasn't a ripple, there wasn't any disruption," Boies said.

But those who oppose same-sex marriage said that the Loving decision did not change the fundamental nature of marriage as being between a man and a woman.

All of which could point to a go-slow approach — and the court has left itself plenty of options.

ROBERT BARNES (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Justices To Watch

Two justices will get the most attention in this week's oral arguments:

Anthony Kennedy is the court's most outspoken advocate of states' rights. But he also provided the critical vote and employed soaring rhetoric in writing opinions striking down a Colorado initiative that would have denied discrimination protection to gays and objecting to state sodomy laws that targeted homosexuals.

Chief Justice John Roberts' conservatism would seem to weigh against same-sex marriage, but as chief justice, he also worries about the long-term influence of the court on a subject in which the public mood is in flux. Adding to the intrigue is Roberts' cousin Jean Po-drasky, a San Francisco lesbian who will be among the guests at today's Supreme Court hearing, the L.A. Times reported. (TWP)

MEASURING PUBLIC OPINION

58% of Americans say they support gay marriage, an all-time high, according to a Washington Post-ABC News poll last week. But some say polls oversell the amount of support for gay marriage. Are they right? Polls on gay-marriage initiatives generally underestimate the opposition by about 7 percentage points, a 2010 study found. The best example of the discrepancy between the polls and the vote may be California's Proposition 8: Polling showed more opposition than support for it, but it passed in 2008, 52 percent to 48 percent. Aside from the notion that the pollsters might be biased, theories include that polls under-sell opposition to gay marriage because people don't want to seem intolerant and that opponents of gay marriage feel more strongly than backers and are more apt to vote. While the Capitals were away on a four-game road trip last week, Braden Holtby could sense a mood shift within the locker room.

during what many players called a make-or-break week. When the Capitals left, they were six points out of eighth place and seven out of the division lead; they returned two and five out, respectively.

jure up some confidence, according to Holtby. Last week, however, there was a new focus that had been lacking.

"You could tell it on their faces," Holtby said. "It was a quiet room. Guys were doing what we need to in order to be focused and get that intensity."

With 16 games left, the Capitals know there is still work to be done. They return to Verizon Center today to take on the Islanders in their first home game since March 17. It's their last home game until April 4, when they'll face the Islanders again. In the teams' last meeting, on March 9, New York handed Washington a 5-2 loss, the first of three straight in regulation after an 8-3-0 stretch.

"I think we're playing a lot better than we were when we went on that last run," Holtby said. "I think our games are more complete. It's a better sign of consistency." ADAM VINGAN (FOR EXPRESS)

After Friday's 1-0 win over Costa Rica, the Americans moved up to second place in their World Cup qualifying group.

Americans face rival in Mexico City after much-needed win

Soccer

In one day, the fortunes for CONCACAF's two powers changed considerably.

Friday's regional World Cup qualifying games — one played in a Colorado blizzard, the other in 105 degrees and sweltering Central American humidity — altered the mindset and landscape for the U.S. men's national team and rival Mexico ahead of tonight's anticipated clash in Mexico City.

Mexico coach Jose Manuel de la Torre is now the one under fire after his team blew a 2-0 lead and settled for a draw in Honduras after stumbling to a home draw against Jamaica last month.

U.S. manager Jurgen Klinsmann has earned a longer leash after combating last week's public scrutiny of his methods and the apparent discontent in the U.S. locker room. The U.S. rallied in the snow for a 1-0 win over Costa Rica on Friday.

With three points, a second-place standing in the qualifying group and a newfound sense of positive momentum, the U.S. can try to deliver a massive blow to its chief rival while it is vulnerable.

"Because of our position in the table now, it gives us more confidence when we go down to Mexico," said Clint Dempsey, who scored the lone U.S. goal Friday and leads the Americans with seven goals this qualifying cycle.

Regardless of Tuesday's result, both teams are considered heavy favorites to qualify for the 2014 World Cup in Brazil. But the latest installment of the border war is sure to be played with the utmost intensity.

"As we move forward and the big games come, in order for us to be a team that competes at the highest level [the commitment] has to be at its absolute highest whenever we step on the field," U.S. midfielder Michael Bradley said. AVI CREDITOR (FOR EXPRESS)

Tiger's Back on Top After Win at Bay Hill

Golf

Tiger Woods is back to No. 1 in the world with a game that looks as good as ever.

Woods walked off the 18th green Monday waving his putter over his head — his magic wand this week at Bay Hill in Orlando, Fla. — to acknowledge the fans who have seen this act before. He won the Arnold Palmer Invitational for the eighth time to tie a PGA Tour record that had not been touched in 48 years.

This win had extra significance. It returned Woods to the top of the world ranking for the first time since the final week of October 2010, the longest spell of his career.

"It's a byproduct of hard work, patience and getting back to winning golf tournaments," he said.

Woods never let anyone closer than two shots in the final round at Bay Hill that was delayed one day by storms. With a conservative bogey he could afford on the last hole, he closed with a 2-under 70

Next up is the Masters, where Woods will try to end his five-year drought in the majors.

Woods fell as low as No. 58 in the world as he coped with a crisis in his personal life and injuries to his left leg. One week after he announced he was dating Olympic ski champion Lindsey Vonn, Woods celebrated his third win of the season, and his sixth going back to Bay Hill a year ago. DOUG FERGUSON (AP)

Terps Showing Maturity

Maryland on the road to play vs. Alabama in NIT quarterfinals

Terps Hoops

It was the season's 36th game, so a victory over Denver in the NIT probably shouldn't seem like a watershed moment for a program.

But for coach Mark Turgeon and the Maryland Terrapins, the win offered the latest sign that the team might be moving past the immaturity and inflexibility that was too often its undoing this season.

An undersized Denver lineup gave fits to Maryland's big men on Thursday, and with 10 minutes left in the game, the Terps trailed by eight points.

"We were desperate," Turgeon said. "We couldn't guard them. They had complete control of the game."

That's when Turgeon opted for a five-guard lineup, and the pay-off was dramatic. The Terps took the lead with 4:12 remaining and kept pushing until they won by double digits.

"Coach definitely thinks we've gotten more mature," sophomore Nick Faust said. "We're doing little things now, doing what's best for the team. Guys are just growing up."

The victory moved second-seeded Maryland into the quarterfinals of the NIT. They'll travel to Tuscaloosa to face top-seeded Alabama on Tuesday.

The Crimson Tide pummeled the Terps 62-42 last season in Turgeon's second game as Maryland's coach. The rematch offers a chance at both a quality road win that has eluded the team this season and a berth in the NIT semifinals next week at Madison Square Garden in New York.

That game could feature the third game of the season between Maryland and Virginia. The Cavaliers, who took the first two, can seal a semifinal berth with a victory over Iowa on Wednesday in Charlottesville.

After playing six games in 12 days, the Terps (24-12) have had four days off leading to Tuesday's game. The Crimson Tide (23-12) will have had just two days off since a 12-point victory over No. 4 Stanford on Saturday.

The Terps have won four of five games since the start of the ACC tournament, demonstrating a drive that wasn't always there in the regular season. DEREK TURNER (FOR EXPRESS)

Stressed about where to stash your driver's license, credit card and SmarTrip card when you're off to the gym? Fight unnecessary wallet use with the CardNinja ($20, Cardninja.com), a slim pocket with a powerful adhesive that sticks to the back of almost any phone or case. Like a real ninja, it's barely noticeable. And even without nunchucks, it's good at keeping your stuff safe — we tried shaking our cards out and couldn't.

Adidas Energy Boost ($150, Adidas.com)

What's New: No, Adidas didn't crush Styrofoam cups and slap them on the bottoms of these shoes. The white stuff is "boost," a material designed to provide maximum energy return, which means "people are able to run faster, longer or both," boasts Chris Brewer, the brand's running specialty manager. Company testing has shown that the cushioning won't wimp out in extreme heat or cold and doesn't break down (so the shoes feel the same on mile one and mile 327).

Wear Test: Adidas recommends ordering a half size larger than normal, and even if you do, prepare for a snug fit. That's partly because the compression fabric on the upper takes some getting used to, but wide feet will probably never be happy, even with such a spring in their step. Not a neutral runner? Wait until adiStar Boost debuts in August.

Run For It: In shoes that will live forever, you're ready for the Vampire 5K ($60, April 26, Vampire5k.com), which pits bloodsuckers against citizens. Pick a side and flee or chase through fog, red powder and strobe lights set up near RFK Stadium. The untimed event ends with a party under the full moon.

Running-shoe companies want you to lace up their newest innovations. Find out which of these styles is the right fit for you. Don't know where to wear it? We've got the ideal D.C.-area debut for each shoe. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

TevaSphere Trail ($120, Teva.com; Trail is for women only; $140 waterproof Trail eVent is also for men)

What's New: They're light and low to the ground, so why is this minimalist shoe different from all other minimalist shoes? It's made for people who can't help but heel strike. Instead of squaring off the back of the shoe, Teva opted for a rounded design that rolls the foot forward no matter which way you land. That could be dangerous if it weren't for the support pods placed on each side of the arch to prevent ankle rolling.

Wear Test: Those steady pods make it seem like your feet have kickstands. It's an odd sensation, but one that you'll probably be grateful for when heading off-road through unknown terrain or at a muddy adventure race (which is what the whole TevaSphere line, below, is made for). They're best at downhill running.

Run For It: You'll need something to keep you steady during a 120-mile overnight relay. At Ragnar Trail Appalachians (June 7 and 8, Ragnartrail.com), about 200 miles from D.C., teams will camp out while members take turns on three loops. Registration prices ($1,160 for teams of eight, $700 for teams of four) rise after April 13.

Nike Flyknit Lunar1+ ($160, Nike.com)

What's New: This isn't your grandma's knitting. The shoe's upper is made of a polyester yarn that's woven tighter in spots that need more support and looser in ones that don't (like above your toes). You can customize the fit by placing the shoes near a teakettle or a hot shower. Put them on when they're warm and steamy, and they'll cool into the shape of your foot. The process "will make it like it's been your shoe for a while without breaking down," says Philip Deeter, assistant head coach of product at Nike's Georgetown store.

Wear Test: The shoe's light weight and the thin fabric on top make it feel like a sock. But the cables that wrap around the sides and the cushioning system remind you that you've laced up. (That support doesn't correct overpronation, however.) After you "steam to fit," there's an immediate — but very subtle — shift in shape.

Run For It: If you were too slow to nab a slot in D.C.'s inaugural Nike Women's Half Marathon (April 28, Nike.com/nwmhalfdc), you can't get a finisher's necklace designed by Tiffany & Co., but you're invited to celebrate female athletes at the "Expotique" over race weekend.

Your Co-Workers Need a Checkup

Q I have some health problems that have involved a lot of diagnostic appointments during my workday. They are coming to an end, and my immediate supervisor has been supportive, but my colleagues seem to act like I'm slacking off on work or ducking out. I am very irritated and want to confront them, but at the same time, I don't feel like I owe them an explanation. NONE OF THEIR BUSINESS, D.C.

You're right. You don't owe them an explanation. And to plan some big confrontation when your supervisor has been supportive seems like asking for it. If they're trying to create drama, they'll only be overjoyed by you giving them more of it.

That's not to say that you need to take their mistreatment. If they're creating a hostile workplace, it's worth talking to your supervisor. And as for your interactions with them, clean the slate and take each new comment as it comes. Respond matter-of-factly in a way that highlights how inappropriate it is: "I'm confused by what you're implying: I had some medical appointments that I used leave for" or just a blank, befuddled stare followed by a "Wow. What a thing to say."

Is This Connection Failing?

Q My wife is constantly texting and doing other stuff on her phone. We'll start talking at dinner, and then she'll get up and go for her phone. I know this is not a common complaint among men, but I will admit it makes me frustrated to feel like I'm talking to a half-there individual. She's been my best friend for a long time, but I really feel like we don't connect much anymore. FRUSTRATED HUSBAND

I think this problem is more common than you think (types the psychologist on her phone). It's quite possible she doesn't know the extent of how addicted she is, or maybe she feels powerless to stop.

Pick a quiet time to have the discussion, and don't be accusatory: "We haven't gotten a lot of time to talk lately, and I feel disconnected. Sometimes it seems I'm just watching you on your smartphone, and it makes it hard to have a real conversation."

If she's not motivated to make changes, you've got to explore why that is. Does she not view it as a problem? Is she actually seeking to avoid connection? The deeper you get, the more you'll know whether this is about that sleek, shiny gadget, or about your marriage.

Exercise helps teens deal with a parent's cancer diagnosis

Adapted from the new book "My Parent Has Cancer and It Really Sucks" ($15, ParentHasCancer.com) by Express columnist Marc Silver and his daughter Maya Silver

Before soccer became a career for James Riley, a new addition to the D.C. United squad, the sport was his saving grace.

When he was a freshman player at Wake Forest University, Riley got a call from his mom.

"That was a shocking phone call," he recalls. "It was probably the last time I cried that hard, hearing those words — 'I have breast cancer' — come out of her mouth."

He considered dropping out of school to go home to Colorado Springs, Colo. But he stayed, and he played.

"Soccer was a place where I could get away," he says. "Leave all your baggage outside the soccer field and step into the lines. You can have a break and be creative and enjoy the game and competing."

Riley's mom is in good health today. And her 30-year-old son reaches out to teens who are facing a parent's cancer. "Do things you love," he tells them.

And it turns out that he set a good example. Physical activity is a great way to deal with the stress, particularly for kids who aren't into talking about it or writing about it.

Tyler Reed, 17, of Glen Allen, Va.,

D.C. United defender James Riley, below, turned to soccer as a way to handle his emotions after his mother was diagnosed with breast cancer.

whose dad was diagnosed with cancer, found that football was — and still is — a release for any problem.

"I'm a quarterback. When I'm on the field, I don't think of anything else," Reed says. "Football is my time of peace and serenity, and it always has been — especially when my dad was sick."

"Being active is a great distraction," says child psychiatrist Paula Rauch, who directs the Marjorie E. Korff PACT Program (Parenting at a Challenging Time) at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. "It often engages you with other people, and it often makes people feel much better. There's good evidence that exercise helps people with their moods."

It doesn't have to be a competitive sport. Dancing works, too.

Psychiatrist James Gordon, founder and director of the Center for Mind-Body Medicine, headquartered in D.C., and author of "Your Guide to the Seven-Stage Journey Out of Depression," prescribes: "Put on hard-driving rhythmic music and shake your body. Shake for five minutes.

Dance to music that really moves you. As you change your body's stance by moving it, your emotions change along with it."

That's what helped Jaclyn Brown deal with her emotions when her mom was diagnosed with stage 3 breast cancer five years ago.

"I've loved to dance ever since I was an itty-bitty girl," says Brown, who promoted breast cancer awareness as 2011-12 Miss Black Louisiana Teen U.S. "Our garage has really smooth floors. I'd [put on] my music and dance my heart out. It was a good reliever of all the questions, stress, emotions I had built up inside of me. I let it out. Nobody could see me in my little zone."

And if it turns out that sports or exercise or dance helps teens cope with a serious medical situation in the family, then they've learned a lesson that will last for many years, experts say. When things get tough, they'll know how not to get beaten down by stress.

One more tip: Parents may give suggestions, but that doesn't mean they know best.

"Find a coping mechanism that works for you," Rauch advises. "Not one that works for Mom and Dad."

"Soccer was a place where I could get away. Leave all your baggage outside. ... You can have a break and be creative and enjoy the game and competing." — D.C. UNITED DEFENDER JAMES RILEY

Cause of Breakouts May Also Be a Cure

In your fight for clear skin, you rinse, scrub and soak your face to get rid of acne-causing bacteria. So you might be surprised to learn that the key to flawless skin might be — yup — bacteria.

According to a new study published in the Journal of Investigative Dermatology, one particular strain of bacteria appears to be associated with clear skin.

To reach that conclusion, researchers used pore strips to lift bacteria from participants' noses and then analyzed the bacteria and looked for associations between bacterial types and skin clarity — which led them to one particular bugger.

Now investigators are considering various means of boosting our levels of this acne-fighting bacteria. Unfortunately, it turns out that your current skin treatments probably kill that good bacteria along with the bad.

While experts still suggest cleansers with bacteria-killing salicylic acid, consider other ways to clear up your skin. A new review in the Journal of the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics, for instance, found a connection between acne and diets high in dairy and high-glycemic-index foods.

Walgreens' new flagship in D.C. has smoothies, top, and quick prescription pickup.

Up the escalator is the beauty department, which welcomes customers with a replica of the "Apotheosis of Washington," the fresco in the Capitol rotunda. More impressive, however, may be the free skin-care analysis services available.

"And if you happen to have time on your hands, get your nails done," Stiller says. Manicures are $12.

The store was designed to make sure you're never waiting around too long, thanks to registers at separate departments in addition to the main checkout area. Customers can also order online and then just swing by Web pickup.

The D.C. flagship is the first Walgreens to offer an interactive "build your own first-aid kit" display. Customers tap a screen to input details — who the kit is for, where it will be stored, etc. — to find out which products are recommended for their needs. v.h.

Chinatown Walgreens is not just a pharmacy; it's a giant 'Experience'

Vitamins at pharmacies usually come in pill form. But at the new Walgreens "Well Experience" flagship store in Chinatown, customers can try the chewable kind — from a towering display of bananas, apples and assorted citrus.

"We always carry the stuff you crave," Walgreens' Beth Stiller says as she points to the candy aisle. "But we make sure we lead with great, fresh offerings."

The three-story building at 801 Seventh St. NW — the seventh flagship in the Walgreens chain, and the first in Washington — is attempting to be much more than a drugstore.

It's also a juice/smoothie bar with D.C.-centric menu items, including Water(melon)gate, a blend of watermelon, pineapple and lemon, and Im"peach"ment, a mix of banana, peach, mango and vanilla rice milk. These made-to-order drinks cost $4 for a small and $5 for a large.

That's also what you'll pay over at the frozen yogurt station, which features six flavors — all nonfat or low-fat. Grab a cup and customize your creation with unlimited toppings.

Or head over to the grab-and-go prepared foods section for salads, sushi and petite sandwiches. (There are also plenty of options for folks not worried about their calorie intake, so you may want to avert your eyes from the selection of baked goods from local favorites Buzz and Grassroots Gourmet.)

There are similar kiosks in the pharmacy to help speed up the process of getting customers their medications. That's just one of several steps Walgreens is taking to change the typical health-care experience.

Under-shelf lighting makes it easier to read packaging, Stiller notes. Not sure what to look for? "Answers" panels scattered around the aisles explain what probiotics are and offer quick medical tips.

For anyone who's still lost, Stiller recommends seeking out the health guide, which she describes as "almost like a concierge." In the ory, that person directs customers with the help of an iPad, although no one was on duty on Saturday, two days after the store's grand opening.

But the pharmacist was as accessible as promised, standing in front of the counter to answer questions and offering to go into the consultation room with customers who prefer more confidentiality.

There's also the adjoining Take Care Clinic that can handle vaccines, physicals and other procedures (such as earwax removal).

But hopefully, all you'll need is the fruit. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

It's Complicated

Lil Wayne lives! For a while, we were worried. When the sizzurp-loving rapper was hospitalized two Fridays ago following seizures, fans — myself included — were on Twitter vigil.

As I followed the drama, my (male) DJ friend, who spins at the lesbian club

By Shauna Miller

Phase 1, asked with exasperation, "Why do you guys all love Lil Wayne?"

It's simple: When I go to clubs, I want a soundtrack that allows me to be someone other than the me who has many (many) discussions about feminism, misogyny and art. I want to hear things that get their sex appeal from a little shock.

Wayne's a character, and while he's certainly peacocking, he does it in a funnier, more spaced-out way than his peers. His rhymes are clever (with a few repugnant exceptions). Weezy (whose "I Am Not a Human Being II" drops today) raps about why, where and especially how the ladies love him — boasts that'd get him slapped if delivered out of the context of his flows.

Hip-hop didn't invent this. Ever actually listened to the Stones' "Under My Thumb"? Zeppelin's "Whole Lotta Love"? Elvis' "A Little Less Conversation"? Sexism is everywhere; sometimes it grinds up against sexy.

Grown-Up Laughter

On his 'Buried Alive' tour, Aziz Ansari finds satisfaction from a deeper form of humor

Comedy

Aziz Ansari is a dozen years into his stand-up career and five years into his role as wannabe-entrepreneur Tom Haverford on NBC's "Parks and Recreation." Even though he just turned 30, he still has a kid-like vibe about him. He's small and spry, with the kind of face a grandma would squeeze. His voice has a cadence that simply makes everything sound funnier when he says it.

And he knows just how funny he is. "If I do the show and it tanks horribly, I can confidently say there's something really weird about that audience," he says.

But there are still things that scare Ansari. Like, really, really scare him. Which is where "Buried Alive," his current stand-up tour, came from: "The idea that people I know are getting married and having babies and how scared I would be to have a baby ... I'm not ready to get married, either."

Turns out he's not alone. "I just started talking about that, and it seemed to strike a chord with people," says Ansari, who comes to DAR Consti-

What's Next

Modern Love

The show Aziz Ansari is preparing now, which will be his fourth stand-up special (after "Buried Alive"), has him doing even more research into modern relationships and adulthood. "It is weird to be in this time where you have so many choices because all the studies they do about choice show that when you have more choices, you're less satisfied," he says. He gets fired up talking about this stuff, even though he won't use any of it until he starts his next stand-up tour. (TWP)

"I just started talking about [marriage, dating and kids], and it seemed to strike a chord with people."

tution Hall this weekend.

There are "two kinds of laughs," he says. "One is that funny 'ha-ha' laugh. But there's another kind of laugh [from] talking about these deeper things ... where someone will laugh and they'll also be like: 'Oh my God, thank you for saying that! I went through the same thing.'"

The reaction has inspired Ansari's most grown-up material yet.

"I've never really done a show like that, with three big themes," such as dating, marriage and kids, Ansari says. "My other shows were more haphazard jokes." Now, when he gets that second kind of laugh, "I feel more successful as a comedian."

Nick Offerman, who plays Ron Swanson on "Parks," says Ansari has long been wise beyond his years.

When they first met, "I found his dapper demeanor and his maturity to be rather irksome because he's so young," Offerman says. But "I almost immediately started asking Aziz for advice on everything."

And, he says: "I've watched him turn into an even classier grown-up."

For Alt-J, the Sky Is the Limit

All the British rockers wanted to do was put out a CD; now, their popularity is soaring

Music

Twelve months ago, the guys in British rock band Alt-J had a very simple goal: to release an album.

"And at least feel that when we died, we could legitimately say we released an album on a label," says keyboardist Gus Unger-Hamilton. "And we could look at it and say, 'Look, we made an album once.'"

The band's 2012 debut, "An Awesome Wave," went on to win the prestigious Mercury Prize given to the top album of the year in the United Kingdom and Ireland in something of a shocker. The Cambridge quartet has since been a near-constant conversation piece on the blogosphere and on the midsize club circuit on both sides of the Atlantic.

The band will be on the road much of the year (with a return to 9:30 Club in September), taking advantage of the opportunities that have come since taking the prize.

Just making the Mercury's coveted 12-member shortlist is a kind of validation, says guitarist-bassist Gwil Sainsbury. Winning it took the tenuousness out of Alt-J's existence.

"For a long time we were playing the album and we didn't know if it was sounding like the album," Sainsbury says. "We weren't sure it was coming across. But people were pleased with it, and I think this Mercury Prize makes us feel like we're pretty much a certified real band now."

Mercury Prize-winning British band Alt-J is soaring to new heights this year.

That status comes with both perks and drawbacks. The good is obvious: bigger gigs, unexpected record sales and the adoration of a growing fan base that digs the band's wobbly, pleasingly eccentric brand of pop music. Some in the United States wonder if Alt-J might be the next big British import, following the path recently laid by Mumford & Sons and Ed Sheeran.

The bad? The haters. Lead singer Joe Newman's voice drives them nuts. And the Mercury? To them, Alt-J's win is just another sign the prize is losing its cachet.

"I think this Mercury Prize makes us feel like we're pretty much a certified real band now."

— GWIL SAINSBURY, GUITARIST-BASSIST FOR THE BAND ALT-J

Never fear, loyal fans. The guys (including drummer Thom Green, who rounds out the quartet) are acutely aware of where the sell-out line is drawn. They recently turned down a potato chips commercial for which they were asked to cover Johnny Cash.

"I like Johnny Cash," says Unger-Hamilton. "I wouldn't want to do that to Johnny Cash."

Selling out shows, it seems, is preferable to selling out creatively.

Music

They haven't hit the studio yet, but Tony Bennett says he "can't wait" to record his next album with Lady Gaga.

He and Gaga collaborated on "The Lady Is a Tramp" for his Grammy-winning, platinum-selling 2011 "Duets II" album. He called the 26-year-old a "wonderful person and a great talent."

Bennett says he wants to work on a full album with Gaga because "she's quite different."

He adds that he's also impressed with Gaga as a business woman. MESFIN FEKADU (AP)

NBC's Repeat Episode

Questions to ponder as 'Tonight Show' drama unfolds again

Late-Night

You'd think NBC would have learned its lesson. Nope! "Late Night" host Jimmy Fallon is rumored to unseat Jay Leno as the new host of the "Tonight Show" in 2014. While the change isn't going to stop the world, the prospect of another round of talk-show turbulence raises a series of questions:

Why do we care?

Because it's funny! Name an NBC show with more laughs, intrigue, double-dealing and disgrace than when the network moved Jay Leno to prime time and handed Conan O'Brien "Tonight," then reversed its decision several months later.

What will it mean to have the "Tonight Show" back in New York?
Count on a more intense booking

NBC is pitting late-night hosts Jimmy Fallon and Jay Leno against each other.

war for CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman." It also may help ABC's "Jimmy Kimmel Live," CBS' "The Late Late Show with Craig Ferguson" and TBS' "Conan" book top-level guests. And it suggests NBC may have learned a lesson from uprooting O'Brien in 2009.

Why would NBC ditch Leno when he has the highest ratings?
Because Leno, 62, is nearing shuffleboard status and has a contract expiring next year. Fallon is 38, also with a contract expiring. NBC doesn't want to lose him to a rival.

What about Letterman, who is 66?

Competing against Fallon and Kimmel, he'll either seem like a venerable elder statesman or just old. And if he takes his leave (his contract is running out, too), we get to start this all over again. FRAZIER MOORE (AP)

“Yes, yes, I know. Everyone hates snow. Blah blah blah ... But you can also stop for just a second and look around because, damn, nature, you purdy.”

— NG AT NGUNDERGROUND BLOGSPOT.COM appreciated the 1 to 3 inches of snowfall that hit the D.C. area overnight Sunday.

“Dear Internet, can we just lose the comments altogether? Let’s just chalk them up as a failed experiment.”

— @COLINMOSSA has an interesting idea on how to improve the quality of conversations online.

“We knew she had something up her sleeve when she showed up on the red carpet with her little bro, channeling 90’s comedy classic ‘Dumb & Dumber’ in a powder blue suit, so we can’t say we were shocked when her on stage look was a veritable kooky feast for the eyes.”

— MAUD DEITCH AT STYLE.MTV.COM analyzes Ke$ha’s red-carpet and stage outfits at the 2013 Nickelodeon Kids’ Choice Awards held Saturday at the Galen Center in Los Angeles.

“Yes, folks, March 25th is International Waffle Day. Observing this holiday means eating waffles for breakfast or waffling about decisions or issues. Or reading books in which characters do these things.”

— GEORGETTE SPELVIN AT READMEDEADLY.COM chose an interesting way to celebrate the holiday, which started as a tradition in Sweden.

“I take an unfollow as personally as if someone at a party left a large, loose circle where I was in casual conversation & joined another.”

— @DREAMHAMPTON explains that she isn’t too bothered when people jump ship from her feed on Twitter.

WARNING: Alcohol Ruins Lives

Have you tried to stop drinking, but can’t? You may be eligible for research studies at NIAAA.

You may be eligible if you:

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be told your attitude requires adjustment, but in fact you are responding reasonably to what comes your way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Now is no time to give up prematurely; you may be going through a slump, but things should pick up very soon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You have not thought about your image much, but today you'll have reason to present yourself in the best possible light.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You'll encounter a situation that raises the stakes considerably, and you know just how you must adjust your own strategy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Jump to conclusions today and you're sure to find yourself operating according to a few errors in thinking — and you cannot afford such errors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Do you really want to keep guessing, when having the right answers is so important at this time? Facts and figures count.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Accuracy in planning and execution is all-important today; you cannot afford any errors or misapplication of resources.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Much is likely to depend upon allocation of funds — and remember, you may not have quite as much to work with as you had anticipated.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Unusual events will require a bit more attention as they are likely to affect you and yours rather significantly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll encounter some surprises today that seem to be separate from each other but which in fact are closely linked.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You may want to get the opinion of someone who is recognized as an expert in a given field today and not merely offer your own just yet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You can solve a mystery once and for all today, but getting that last clue may prove tricky — and require more of you than mere tact.

DO YOU DRINK A LOT OF ALCOHOL?

Do you also feel tense, worried, or distressed?

If so, you may be eligible to participate in a study. The goal of this project (NIH Study #13-AA-0040) is to study whether a medication (Baclofen) currently approved to treat muscle spasms affects alcohol drinking.

Eligible volunteers will be:

- In good health and drug free
- Between the ages of 21 and 65
- Willing to come for four outpatient visits and one overnight stay at the NIH CC in Bethesda, MD

Participants will receive a free medical evaluation and will be paid for doing the study..

WHAT HAPPENS IN VEGAS LIVES ON THE INTERNET FOREVER

Lesson Learned

Officials say Britain's Prince Harry is returning to the United States — but this time he's skipping Las Vegas. St. James's Palace said Monday that the 28-year-old prince will travel to the East Coast and Colorado and visit Arlington National Cemetery and Walter Reed National Military Medical Center. Harry, who is third in line to the throne, made headlines on another U.S. visit when he was caught frolicking in the nude after what was alleged to have been a game of strip billiards in his Las Vegas hotel room.
